中考英语完形填空：班级图书角

完形填空原文

There was an empty corner in our classroom that nobody used. It was dusty and piled with broken chairs. One day, our class monitor, Li Fang, had an 1. "Why don't we turn this corner into a reading space?" she suggested.

Most students didn't think it was 2. "Nobody reads during break time," said one boy. "We'd rather play on our phones." But Li Fang didn't give up. She made a plan and showed it to our head teacher, Ms. Chen, who happily 3 it.

The next Saturday, Li Fang came to school with cleaning tools. Only three students showed up to 4 — me and two others. We spent the whole morning cleaning the corner, painting the wall light blue, and putting up a small wooden shelf.

"We still need books," Li Fang said. She wrote a 5 and posted it on the class notice board: "Donate a book, share a world." At first, only a few books appeared on the shelf — mostly old textbooks nobody wanted.

Then something unexpected happened. Ms. Chen brought ten brand-new novels from her own collection. When other students saw their teacher's 6, they started bringing books too. Within a week, the shelf was full of stories, science books, and comic books.

The reading corner slowly changed our class. During break time, instead of staring at phones, some students started picking up books. They would sit on the colorful cushions Li Fang had brought and 7 quietly. Conversations changed too — students began talking about interesting books instead of just games and gossip.

The biggest 8 was Zhang Peng, a boy who had never read a single book for fun. One day, I saw him sitting in the corner, completely lost in a detective novel. He didn't even hear the bell 9.

At the end of the term, our class won the school's "Best Reading Class" award. Li Fang stood on stage, smiling, but she said the 10 belonged to everyone. "I just cleaned a corner," she said. "You filled it with life."
