中考英语完形填空：写给未来的信

完形填空原文

At the beginning of seventh grade, our English teacher, Ms. Wang, gave us a special task. "Write a 1 to yourself," she said. "But this letter is not for today. You will open it on your last day of middle school."

We all thought it was a strange idea, but Ms. Wang handed out envelopes and told us to start writing. "Tell your future self about your 2, your worries, and your hopes," she said. "Be honest. Nobody will read it except you."

I stared at the blank paper for a long time. What should I write to the person I would become in three years? Finally, I picked up my pen and began:

"Dear Future Me, right now I am twelve years old and a little 3 about starting middle school. I hope that by the time you read this, you have found some good friends. I also hope you still love drawing, because right now it is the only thing that makes me truly 4."

I sealed the letter and handed it to Ms. Wang. She put all our letters in a big box and 5 it with tape. "I'll keep this box safe," she promised. "Three years from now, I'll give them back."

Time flew by. I made friends, took exams, joined the art club, and 6 had my first argument with a best friend. Middle school was nothing like I had imagined.

On the last day of ninth grade, Ms. Wang walked into our classroom carrying the old box. I had almost 7 about the letter. When she handed me my envelope, my hands were shaking.

I tore it open and read the words of my twelve-year-old self. Tears rolled down my 8. That younger me was so innocent and worried about things that turned out to be fine. Yes, I had found wonderful friends. And yes, I still loved drawing — I had even won a prize in the city art competition.

But what 9 me the most was the last line: "No matter what happens, please don't give up on your dreams."

I folded the letter carefully and put it back in the envelope. It was the most valuable thing I 10 — a message from the past, reminding me to keep going.
