中考英语完形填空：旧相机的故事

完形填空原文

When Grandpa moved to a nursing home last spring, he gave me an old film camera. "Take good care of it," he said. "It has 1 more of the world than most people ever will."

The camera was heavy and scratched. It didn't look special at all. In a world of smartphones, nobody used film cameras anymore. I almost put it in a drawer and 2 about it.

But one Sunday afternoon, I was bored and decided to try it out. I loaded a roll of film — I had to watch an online video to learn 3 — and went to the park near my house.

Using the old camera was completely 4 from using a phone. I couldn't see the picture right away. I had only 36 shots on the roll, so I couldn't waste any. Before pressing the button, I had to think 5: Was this scene worth keeping?

I spent the whole afternoon taking just twelve photos. I photographed an old man feeding pigeons, a child chasing bubbles, and the golden sunlight falling 6 the leaves. Each time I pressed the button, I felt excited — like I was catching a moment that would never come back.

A week later, I picked up the developed photos from the shop. I spread them on my desk and was 7. They were not perfect — some were too dark, some were blurry — but every single one told a story. They felt more 8 than the hundreds of photos sitting in my phone.

I called Grandpa and told him about my experience. He laughed. "That camera taught me to slow down and really 9 at the world," he said. "Every photo cost money, so I had to choose carefully. And because I chose carefully, every photo became a treasure."

Now I take the old camera with me every weekend. My friends think I'm strange, but I don't mind. The camera has taught me that sometimes, having 10 makes you appreciate more.
