中考英语完形填空：跑步搭档

完形填空原文

I used to hate running. Every time our P.E. teacher asked us to run laps around the track, I would be the last one to 1. I was slow, out of breath, and embarrassed. Running felt like punishment.

Then, at the start of eighth grade, a new student named He Yang joined our class. He was tall, thin, and loved running. He ran every morning before school — rain or 2.

One day after P.E. class, He Yang came over to me. "Do you want to run with me tomorrow morning?" he asked. I thought he was 3. Why would the fastest runner in our class want to run with the slowest?

"I'm serious," he said, seeing my doubtful face. "Running is more fun with a 4."

The next morning, I dragged myself out of bed at six o'clock and met He Yang at the school gate. I expected him to sprint ahead and leave me behind. But 5, he matched my slow pace exactly.

"You don't have to wait for me," I said, feeling guilty.

"I'm not waiting," he said with a grin. "I'm running 6 you. There's a difference."

We ran together every morning after that. He Yang never complained about my 7. Instead, he taught me how to breathe properly, how to land on my feet the right way, and how to set small goals. "Don't think about the whole track," he said. "Just focus on reaching the next tree."

Slowly, I improved. One tree became two trees, then three. After two months, I could run a full lap without 8. After three months, I ran my first two laps without slowing down.

At the school sports day, I signed up for the 800-meter race — something I would never have 9 doing before. I didn't win. I came in fifth. But when I crossed the finish line, He Yang was there, cheering louder than anyone.

"You see?" he said, giving me a high five. "You were never slow. You just needed someone to run 10 you."
