中考英语完形填空：一封匿名信

完形填空原文

After the mid-term exam, I got my worst grade ever in math. I felt like a complete 1. Everyone around me seemed to be doing well, while I was falling further and further behind.

I didn't tell anyone how I felt. I just put on a fake smile and pretended everything was 2. But inside, I was drowning in self-doubt.

On Thursday morning, I opened my desk and found a small piece of folded paper. It wasn't signed. In neat handwriting, it said: "Don't be so hard on yourself. One bad test doesn't 3 who you are. I believe in you."

I read it five times. Who wrote this? I looked around the classroom, but nobody was paying 4 to me. The note was simple, but it made my heavy heart feel just a little lighter.

The next day, there was another note: "Did you know that Einstein failed his college entrance exam? Failure is not the opposite of success — it's part of the 5 to success."

I smiled for the first time in days.

Every morning for a whole week, I found a new note in my desk. Each one had a different message of 6. One said, "You're stronger than you think." Another said, "Progress is more important than perfection."

By Friday, I felt completely 7. I started studying math again, asking questions in class, and even solving problems I used to skip. The notes had given me something I had lost — confidence.

I never found out who wrote those notes. I 8 it was my best friend Xiao Mei, because the handwriting looked similar to hers. But when I asked, she just smiled and said, "Does it really matter who wrote them? What matters is that they 9."

She was right. It didn't matter. What mattered was that someone in this world cared enough to write a few kind words to a 10 who was struggling. And those words changed everything.
