中考英语完形填空：集市上的陶艺

完形填空原文

During the spring festival, our town held a traditional market. There were food stands, toy sellers, and an old man 1 clay pots and vases at a small table. I stopped to watch. His hands moved slowly but skillfully. A lump of clay turned into a beautiful bowl under his fingers.

"Would you like to try?" the old man asked with a kind smile. I 2 my head. "I'll probably ruin it," I said. "There's no such thing as a mistake in art," he replied. "Every piece is unique." His words encouraged me. I sat down and put my hands on the clay.

At first, the clay didn't obey me. My bowl looked crooked and uneven. I felt 3. "Don't give up," the old man said. "Feel the clay. Let your hands learn." I took a deep breath and tried again. This time, I moved more slowly. I paid attention to the shape. Little by little, something like a cup began to 4.

"Not bad for a first try," the old man said. He showed me how to smooth the edges and add a simple pattern. Under his guidance, my clumsy cup became something I could be 5 of. "Take it home," he said. "It will remind you that beautiful things take time and patience."

I carried my clay cup home carefully. I put it on my desk. Every time I look at it, I remember the old man's words: "Every piece is unique." My cup is not perfect — it has a small crack and the shape is a bit 6. But I made it with my own hands. That makes it special.

I later learned that the old man had been making pottery for over fifty years. He came to the market every year, not to sell many pieces, but to 7 the craft to young people. "Traditional skills will disappear if no one learns them," he said. "I want to pass them on before it's too late."

That day at the market, I learned something beyond pottery. I learned that perfection is not the only goal. The 8 of creating something with your own hands — the trying, the failing, the improving — that is what matters. I also learned that some people spend their lives 9 knowledge to the next generation. They are the quiet heroes of our culture.

I still have that clay cup. It sits on my desk, a 10 of a lesson I learned on a spring day: beauty can be imperfect, and the best teachers are often the kindest ones.
