中考英语完形填空：生日蛋糕的秘密

完形填空原文

It was the night before my fourteenth birthday. I was lying in bed, thinking about what gifts I might get. But I heard strange 1 coming from the kitchen — the sound of bowls clinking and a mixer running.

I tiptoed to the kitchen door and peeked inside. There was my dad, wearing Mom's pink apron, covered in flour. He was trying to bake a birthday cake. The kitchen was a complete 2 — egg shells on the floor, sugar spilled on the counter, and something that smelled slightly burned.

Dad was not a good cook. Mom usually made my birthday cake every year. But this year, Mom was away on a business trip and wouldn't be back until 3. I suddenly understood: Dad was trying to make the cake himself so I wouldn't feel sad on my birthday.

I watched him 4 for a while. He stared at his phone screen, reading a recipe, then poured something into a bowl, then checked the phone again. He cracked an egg, but half the shell fell into the 5. He picked out the tiny pieces one by one, very patiently.

I almost laughed, but then I felt something warm in my chest. Dad had never baked anything in his life. He was doing this 6 for me.

I went back to bed quietly, pretending I had seen 7.

The next morning, Dad woke me up with a big smile. "Happy birthday!" he said, holding a cake. It was the ugliest cake I had ever seen — the icing was uneven, the candles were 8, and one side was higher than the other.

"I know it's not 9," Dad said, scratching his head. "But I tried my best."

I took a bite. It was a little too sweet and slightly dry. But honestly, it was the most delicious cake I had ever 10. Because every bite was filled with love.
