中考英语完形填空：告别信

完形填空原文

On the last day of ninth grade, our head teacher, Mr. Huang, walked into the classroom carrying a large cardboard box. "Before you leave today," he said, "I have one last 1 for you."

He placed the box on his desk and opened it. Inside were dozens of small white envelopes. "Three years ago, on your first day here, I asked each of you to write a letter to your future self. Do you 2?"

A wave of whispers ran through the classroom. Some students nodded excitedly. Others looked 3 — they had completely forgotten about it.

Mr. Huang handed out the envelopes one by one. When I got mine, I stared at my own handwriting on the front: "To Myself in Three Years." My hands trembled a little as I 4 it open.

"Dear future me," the letter began. "I hope you are braver than I am right now. I hope you have learned to speak up in class and not be 5 of making mistakes. I also hope you still remember that your dream is to become a doctor."

I read the letter three times. So much had 6 in three years. I was no longer the shy kid who sat in the back and never raised her hand. I had become class monitor, joined the debate team, and even gave a speech at the school assembly. And yes, I still wanted to be a 7.

I looked around the classroom. Some students were laughing at what their younger selves had written. Others were crying quietly, 8 by their own innocent words.

Mr. Huang stood at the front, watching us with gentle eyes. "You see," he said softly, "you have all grown so much. Be 9 of yourselves."

As we walked out of the school gate for the last time, I held the letter close to my heart. Middle school was ending, but the 10 I made here — the lessons, the friendships, the dreams — would stay with me forever.
