中考英语完形填空：陶艺课上的意外

完形填空原文

Our school offered a pottery class as an elective this year. I chose it because I thought it would be easy — just playing with clay. I was completely 1.

On the first day, Mr. Wang, the pottery teacher, placed a lump of grey clay on each table. "Today, you will make a simple bowl," he said. Simple? I thought. How hard can that be?

Very hard, it turned out. The clay didn't 2 the way I wanted it to. When I tried to shape it into a bowl, it looked more like a pancake. When I tried to make the walls higher, they 3 over. After forty minutes, my "bowl" was a sad, lopsided mess.

I looked around. Everyone else seemed to be 4 too. That made me feel slightly better.

Mr. Wang walked around the room, nodding and smiling. "Don't worry," he said. "The clay is teaching you. You need to listen to it, not 5 it."

I didn't understand what he meant at first. But over the next few weeks, something 6. I stopped trying to force the clay into shapes and started feeling its texture, its weight, its moisture. When I pushed too hard, the clay would crack. When I was too gentle, it wouldn't 7. I had to find the perfect balance.

By the fifth week, I made my first real bowl. It wasn't beautiful — one side was thicker than the other, and the bottom was slightly uneven. But it was mine, and I was 8 of it.

Mr. Wang picked it up and examined it. "This is good work," he said. "Do you know why? Because it's honest. You didn't try to make it look 9. You let the clay be itself."

I took the bowl home and gave it to my mother. She put flowers in it and placed it on the dining table. Every time I see it, I remember what Mr. Wang taught us: the best things in life are not the ones that look perfect, but the ones that are made with 10 and patience.
