中考英语完形填空：奶奶的缝纫机

完形填空原文

In the corner of my grandmother's bedroom stood an old sewing machine. It was black, heavy, and made a rhythmic clicking sound whenever she used it. As a child, I loved watching her 1 — her fingers moved so quickly that they seemed to dance across the fabric.

Grandma could make almost anything: dresses, curtains, pillow covers, and even 2 for my stuffed animals. "A good pair of hands can turn old cloth into gold," she used to say.

When I was ten, I ripped my favorite jacket during a basketball game. A long tear went right through the sleeve. I was 3 — it was the jacket my mother had bought me for my birthday.

"Bring it to me," Grandma said. She examined the tear and nodded. "I can 4 this."

She sat down at the sewing machine and worked for almost an hour. When she was done, she handed me the jacket. The tear was completely 5. Instead of simply closing the hole, she had sewn a small star pattern over it in bright yellow thread. It looked even better than before.

"Why didn't you just close the hole?" I asked.

She smiled. "Because a scar doesn't have to be ugly. If you 6 it with care, it can become something beautiful."

I wore that jacket for two more years. When classmates asked about the star, I always told them the 7 proudly.

Years later, Grandma's hands became too stiff to sew. The sewing machine sat 8 in the corner, collecting dust. One day, I asked her to teach me. She looked surprised but happy. "You really want to learn?" she asked.

"Of course," I said. "Someone needs to keep the machine 9."

She taught me the basics — how to thread the needle, how to control the speed, how to sew a straight line. I wasn't good at first. My lines were crooked and my stitches were uneven. But Grandma just laughed and said, "That's exactly how I started."

Now, whenever something tears, I don't throw it away. I sit down at the old sewing machine, close my eyes for a moment, and 10 of Grandma. Then I start to sew — turning scars into stars.
