中考英语完形填空：博物馆的惊喜

完形填空原文

Last spring, our class took a trip to the city museum. I had never been there before and didn't expect much — I thought it would be 1 and boring, just a lot of old things in glass cases.

When we arrived, a friendly guide greeted us. "Today we'll explore something 2," she said with a smile. "I want you to find one thing that speaks to your heart."

I walked through the halls without much interest until I stopped in front of a small painting. It showed a boy sitting by a 3, reading a book. The sunlight fell on his face. Something about it felt familiar — maybe because I used to read by the river near my grandparents' house when I was younger.

I stood there for a long time. The guide noticed and came over. "This painting is over a hundred years old," she said. "The artist was only sixteen when he painted it. He 4 that reading could change a young person's life."

Her words surprised me. A teenager, like me, had created something that still moved people after a century. It made me think: what could I create if I tried?

Before leaving, I bought a postcard of the painting. I 5 it on my desk at home. Whenever I feel tired of studying, I look at it and remember that day.

The museum trip changed my 6 about "boring" places. Old things can hold powerful stories. They connect us to people who lived long ago but had dreams just like ours.

I've visited the museum two more times since then. Each visit, I discover something 8. Last time, I even 7 my little sister to go with me. She loved it too.

Now I understand why people say museums are treasure houses. The real treasure isn't the objects 9 — it's the 10 and inspiration they give us.
