When we arrived at the park, a worker showed us how to dig the right 2 for each tree. "The hole should be deep enough for the roots," he said. I had never planted a tree before, so I listened 3. My partner and I chose a young maple tree. We dug together, taking turns when our arms got tired.

After we placed the tree in the hole, we filled it with soil and 4 it with water. The worker told us to put a wooden stick next to the tree to support it while it grew. We also wrote our 5 on a small card and hung it on the stick. "May you grow tall and strong," I wrote.

Every weekend after that, I would go to the park to 6 my tree. I watered it, pulled out weeds around it, and watched it grow. At first, the leaves were small and few. But as the weeks passed, they became 7 and greener.

One year later, the little tree had grown much taller. Standing beside it, I felt a sense of 8. I had helped create something that would live for many years. Planting a tree is like planting hope.
