中考英语完形填空：画展上的无名画

完形填空原文

Our school art club held a painting exhibition in the hall. Students could display their works. I had painted a landscape of the mountains near my hometown, but I didn't sign my name. I was too 1 to put my name on it — what if people didn't like it?

On the opening day, I walked around and looked at other students' paintings. They were 2 — colorful, creative, and full of life. My painting seemed plain in comparison. I stood in a corner and watched people pass by. Most of them didn't stop at my work.

Then I noticed an old man standing in front of my painting for a long time. He had gray hair and wore simple clothes. He 3 his head and said to the teacher beside him, "This one is special. The artist understands the mountains. You can feel the peace in it."

My heart beat faster. The teacher asked, "Do you know who painted it? There's no name."

The old man smiled. "It doesn't 4. True art speaks for itself. The person who painted this has a gift. I hope they never hide it."

I wanted to step forward and say, "It's me!" But my legs wouldn't move. I was afraid. What if he changed his mind when he saw me? What if I 5 him?

The old man left. I ran after him and finally caught up at the gate. "Sir," I said, breathing hard, "I painted that picture. Thank you for your kind words."

He looked at me with warm eyes. "Young friend, never be afraid to 6 your work. Your painting has its own voice. Let it be heard."

That day I learned an important lesson. We often 7 ourselves too much. We worry about what others think and hide our talents. But the world needs to see what we can do. Our creations, like that mountain landscape, have value — not because everyone likes them, but because they come from our 8.

Back at the exhibition, I found a pen and wrote my name in the corner of my painting. It was a small step, but it 9 a big change in how I saw myself. I was no longer the shy girl who hid in the corner. I was an artist, ready to share her 10 with the world.
