中考英语完形填空：补课回家的夜路

完形填空原文

I have tutoring classes every Tuesday and Thursday evening. The class ends at 9 p.m. By the time I get out, the streets are quiet and dark. I used to feel 1 walking home alone. The shadows under the streetlamps made me imagine all kinds of scary things.

One night, I was halfway home when I heard footsteps behind me. My heart beat fast. I didn't dare to 2. Then someone called my name. It was my father. He had been waiting at the tutoring center and had followed me at a distance.

"I didn't want you to feel like a child," he said. "But I also couldn't let you walk alone in the dark. So I walked behind you. You didn't need to see me — you just needed to know you weren't 3."

I was surprised and moved. I had thought I was brave enough to handle the night walk. But Dad had been there all along, 4 from a distance. He had never said anything. He had never made me feel helpless. He had simply made sure I was safe.

"That's what parents do," Dad said with a smile. "We don't always need to be in front. Sometimes the best way to 5 is to walk behind — close enough to catch you if you fall, far enough to let you feel independent."

From that night on, I knew Dad would be somewhere on my way home. Sometimes I caught a 6 of him in the corner of my eye. Sometimes I didn't see him at all. But I always felt calm. I wasn't afraid of the dark anymore. I wasn't afraid of being alone. Because I knew that love doesn't always 7. Sometimes it follows quietly, like a shadow that never leaves.

When I got accepted into my dream high school, Dad said, "You did it yourself. I just walked behind." But I knew the 8. I had never truly walked alone. Every step of that dark road, he had been there. His silent presence gave me the 9 to keep going — not because he carried me, but because he made me believe I could carry myself.

Now I'm older. I don't need Dad to walk behind me anymore. But I will never forget those Tuesday and Thursday nights — the quiet streets, the distant footsteps, and the love that 10 without asking for anything in return. That's the kind of love that shapes us: steady, silent, and always there when we need it most.
