中考英语完形填空：志愿者日的红马甲

完形填空原文

Our school holds a Community Service Day every spring. Students wear red vests and help out in the neighborhood — cleaning parks, visiting the elderly, or teaching children to read. I had never joined before. I thought it was for "good students" who had nothing better to do. I was wrong.

Last year, my teacher signed me up. "Try it once," she said. "You might 1 something."

I was assigned to a nursing home. My task was to read newspapers to an old man named Mr. Lin. He was in his eighties and could no longer see well. At first I felt awkward. I didn't know what to 2. But when I started reading, something changed. Mr. Lin leaned forward, his face full of interest. He asked me to slow down so he could imagine every scene. "Young friend," he said, "your voice brings the world back to me."

His words made me feel 3. I had never thought that something so simple — reading aloud — could matter so much. For two hours, I read about sports, weather, and a story about a lost dog that was found. Mr. Lin laughed at the happy ending. "I used to have a dog," he said. "Thank you for this afternoon. You've given me more than a newspaper. You've given me 4."

When I left the nursing home, I felt different. The red vest no longer felt like a costume. It felt like a 5 — a promise to help, to care, to show up. I had gone there thinking I would "do a favor." I left knowing I had received more than I had given.

That night, I wrote in my diary: "Today I learned that serving others doesn't make you less. It makes you 6. The more you give, the more you understand what really matters."

Since then, I've joined every Community Service Day. I've read to Mr. Lin many times. We've become friends. He tells me stories about his youth, and I tell him about school. The red vest hangs in my closet now, not just for one day a year. I wear it whenever I 7 — at the library, at the animal shelter, anywhere someone might need a helping hand.

Some people think volunteering is about 8 time. They're wrong. It's about finding meaning. That red vest taught me that we are all connected. Your smile can brighten someone's day. Your voice can bring the world to someone who can't see it. Your presence can make someone feel less 9.

We don't need to be superheroes to make a difference. We just need to 10 — in a red vest or not — and say, "I'm here. How can I help?" That's the spirit of Community Service

Day. And that's the spirit we can carry every day.
