中考英语完形填空：运动会后的接力棒

完形填空原文

Our school sports meet was last month. I was in the relay race team. We had trained for weeks. We believed we would win. But during the race, I dropped the baton. Our team came in last. I felt so ashamed that I didn't want to 1 anyone.

After the race, I sat alone on the steps. I held the baton in my hand. It felt heavy — not because it was, but because of the 2 I had let down. I was about to leave when my teammate Tom came over. He sat down beside me without saying a word. Then he said, "We 3 as a team. We lose as a team too. Nobody runs alone in a relay."

His words surprised me. I had expected him to be angry. Instead, he was 4. "Next year we'll train harder," he said. "And you'll run the last leg again. We believe in you."

That baton — the one I had dropped — became something different to me. It was no longer a sign of 5. It became a reminder that my teammates had chosen to stand by me. They didn't blame me. They chose to 6 together for the next race.

I kept the baton. I put it on my desk. Every time I felt like giving up on something difficult, I looked at it. It reminded me that one 7 doesn't define you. What matters is whether you stand up again. It also reminded me that we need people who 8 us when we fall — people who don't walk away but stay and help us get back up.

Now I understand that a relay race is not just about speed. It's about trust. When you pass the baton, you're saying, "I trust you to run with this." When someone drops it, the real test is: do we 9 each other enough to try again?

That baton still sits on my desk. I don't need to look at it often anymore. But I will never forget the lesson it taught me: in life, we all drop the baton sometimes. The 10 is not to run away. It's to pick it up, pass it on, and keep running — together.
