中考英语完形填空：修自行车摊的老师傅

完形填空原文

There is a bicycle repair stall at the corner of our street. An old craftsman has been running it for over thirty years. His hands are rough from years of work, but his skills are excellent. When my bike had a flat tire last month, I took it to him. He 1 the problem in seconds and started to fix it. "This will only take a few minutes," he said. I sat on a small stool and watched. His movements were slow but 2. Every turn of the wrench was exact.

While he worked, we talked. I asked him why he still did this job at his age. He smiled and said, "I 3 it. When I see a bike run well again, I feel happy." He didn't charge me much — just five yuan for the repair. I wanted to give him more, but he 4 his hand. "A fair price is enough," he said. I left with a working bike and a 5 respect for the old man.

A week later, I passed by his stall again. A child's bike was broken. The child looked worried. The old man was fixing it carefully. I heard him say, "Don't worry. Your bike will be 6 soon." The child's face lit up. That moment I understood — the old man didn't just fix bikes. He fixed people's 7 too. His patience and kindness made everyone feel better.

Now I always say hello when I pass his stall. Sometimes I stop to chat. He tells me stories about the old days when bicycles were the main 8 of transport. Those stories are interesting. I learn that every job has its own value. The old craftsman may not be rich, but he has something more — the 9 of doing what he loves and helping others. In a world that moves so fast, his small stall reminds us that some things never 10. Good work, honest people, and a warm heart — they are always there.
