中考英语完形填空：晚自习后的路灯

完形填空原文

Wang Fang lived in a small village. Her school was in the town, about five kilometres away. Every evening after the last class, she had to walk home alone. The road was dark, and she often felt 1. But there was one thing that made her feel better—the street lamps along the way.

Those old lamps would 2 at exactly 6:30 every evening. When Wang Fang saw their warm light, she knew she was safe. The light helped her see the road clearly and kept away her 3. She walked under the lamps, step by step, and thought about what she had learned that day. Sometimes she would 4 a song to herself. The journey home became a quiet time for her to think.

One night, Wang Fang noticed that one lamp was not working. The next day, she told the village head about it. "Thank you for letting us know," he said. "We will 5 it as soon as possible." Two days later, the lamp was fixed. Wang Fang felt happy that she could help. She learned that speaking up could make a 6.

In winter, the nights were longer. Wang Fang often walked home in the cold wind. But when she saw those lights ahead, she felt warm inside. The lamps were like friends waiting for her. They 7 her that she was not alone. Many students like her walked this road every day. The lamps had been there for years, guiding one generation after another.

Years later, Wang Fang became a teacher. She often told her students about those lamps. "Never be afraid of the dark," she said. "There is always light somewhere. And remember, you can also be a 8 for others." The story of the lamps taught her that small acts of kindness could light up someone's way. She hoped her students would always look for the light and 9 become the light for others. The road and those street lamps would forever 10 in her memory.
