中考英语完形填空：体育课上的口哨

完形填空原文

Our PE teacher Mr. Wang always carries a small silver whistle. When he blows it, the whole class 1 and listens. That sound has become the signal of every PE lesson — it means "Stop and pay attention." For three years, I have heard that whistle hundreds of times, but I never thought it would 2 me one day.

It happened during the 800-meter run last month. I was the slowest in my class and always felt 3 when we had running practice. That day, when the race started, I fell behind quickly. Soon I was the only one still running on the track. I wanted to stop and give up.

Just then, I heard the whistle. But this time it was different — Mr. Wang was blowing it in a 4, rhythmic way. He was running beside me, keeping the same speed. "Keep going! Don't 5!" he shouted. The whistle seemed to match my footsteps, encouraging me to move forward. With his company, I 6 the finish line at last. I was last, but I had never felt prouder.

After that, Mr. Wang often used the whistle in a special way to encourage slower students. A short blow meant "You can do it." Two quick blows meant "Almost there." The whistle was no longer just a tool for 7. It became a language of care and support.

Now when I hear the whistle, I remember that day. I learned that the real 8 of PE is not about winning, but about trying our best and never giving up. Mr. Wang's whistle taught me that everyone has their own 9, and what matters is that we keep running toward it. The whistle will always remind me to be 10 to myself and to others who are still on their way.
