中考英语完形填空：晨跑时的秒表

完形填空原文

Our school holds a morning run every Tuesday and Thursday. Students gather on the playground at 6:30 a.m. Before we start, our PE teacher holds a stopwatch in his hand. He uses it to record our running 1. At first, I didn't like morning runs. I felt tired and often wanted to give up. But the stopwatch changed my view.

One day, the teacher told us that he would write down each student's time. "Try to beat your own record next time," he said. That 2 made me think. I began to run a little faster each week. When I saw my time improve from five minutes to four minutes and thirty seconds, I felt very 3. The stopwatch was no longer something to fear. It became a tool that helped me see my progress.

Through morning runs, I learned that progress needs 4. We cannot become better in one day. But if we keep trying, we will see small changes. The stopwatch shows us the truth—every second counts. It also teaches us to set goals and work 5 them. Now I look forward to Tuesday and Thursday mornings. I want to see if I can run faster than before.

My classmates and I often 6 each other before we run. "Come on! You can do it!" we say. This encouragement helps us when we feel tired. The stopwatch reminds us that we are not running alone. We are all part of a team. Even when we cross the finish line at different times, we 7 the same goal—to become healthier and stronger.

I keep a small notebook to write down my running times. Looking at the numbers, I can see how I have 8 over the months. The stopwatch has taught me an important lesson: success is not about being the fastest, but about being better than you were 9. I am grateful for the morning runs and the stopwatch. They have given me both a strong body and a valuable 10.
