完形填空原文

Every morning at 7:15, an old man in a yellow vest stood at the crossroad near Chengnan Middle School. He held a small red flag, helping students 1 the busy street safely. Rain or shine, he was always there. But most students walked past him without even saying hello.

Ding Ling was one of the students who crossed the road every day. Like others, she never paid much 4 to Lao Zhang. He was just part of the background, like a street lamp or a traffic sign.

One freezing winter morning, Ding Ling was running late. She dashed across the road without 5. Suddenly, a car came speeding around the corner. Ding Ling froze in the middle of the road. At that moment, Lao Zhang 6 forward and pulled her back to the sidewalk. The car rushed past, missing her by just inches.

Ding Ling's legs went weak. She looked up at Lao Zhang's face — it was wrinkled and weathered, but his eyes were full of 7. "Be careful, child," he said gently, his voice slightly 8.

That evening, Ding Ling told her parents what had happened. The next morning, she woke up early, bought a cup of hot tea, and 9 it to Lao Zhang at the crossroad. "Thank you for protecting us every day," she said. The old man's eyes became wet. He nodded and whispered, "As long as you children are 10, that's all that matters."
