中考英语完形填空：最好的听众

完形填空原文

Fang Lei was popular at school. He was funny, talkative, and always the center of attention. But his best friend, Xia Yu, had been acting 1 lately — quieter than usual, often staring at her desk with empty eyes.

One afternoon, Fang Lei sat next to Xia Yu during lunch and started talking about a movie he had just seen. He went on and on about the exciting plot. But when he finally 2 and looked at Xia Yu, he noticed she was barely eating. Her eyes were red.

"Hey, are you all right?" he asked. Xia Yu opened her mouth, then 3 it again. After a long pause, she whispered, "My parents are getting divorced." Fang Lei was shocked. He wanted to say something 4, but no words came out. So he just sat there quietly.

To his surprise, Xia Yu continued talking. She told him about the arguments at home, the 5 nights, and how scared she felt about the future. Fang Lei didn't interrupt. He didn't try to give 6 or tell jokes to lighten the mood. He simply listened.

When the bell rang, Xia Yu wiped her eyes and said, "Thank you." Fang Lei was 7. "But I didn't do anything," he said. Xia Yu shook her head. "You did the most important thing — you 8. Most people just talk. Very few people truly listen."

That conversation changed Fang Lei. He realized that being a good friend wasn't always about being funny or 9. Sometimes, the best thing you can do is close your mouth, open your ears, and let someone know they're not 10.
