中考英语完形填空：奔跑的意义

完形填空原文

Gao Peng used to hate running. In P.E. class, he was always the last one to finish. He thought running was 1 and painful, and he couldn't understand why anyone would do it for fun.

Everything changed one spring morning. Gao Peng woke up feeling stressed about an upcoming exam. He couldn't focus on his books, so he decided to go outside and take a 2. Without planning, he started jogging slowly along the river near his home.

At first, his legs felt heavy and his breathing was 3. He wanted to stop several times. But something kept him going — maybe the fresh air, maybe the sound of birds, or maybe just the 4 to run away from his worries for a while.

After about twenty minutes, something 5 happened. His body relaxed, his mind became clear, and he felt a strange sense of peace. The exam stress that had been weighing him down suddenly felt much 6. By the time he got home, he was sweating but smiling.

The next morning, Gao Peng got up early and ran again. And the morning after that. Within a month, running had become part of his daily 7. He ran in sunshine and in rain. He ran when he was happy and when he was sad. Each time, running 8 him the same gift — a clear mind and a calm heart.

His classmates noticed the change. "You seem more 9 lately," one friend said. Gao Peng laughed. "I just found a good way to deal with stress."

At the end of the term, Gao Peng wrote in his journal: "Running taught me that most problems feel smaller after you 10 moving. In running and in life, the hardest part is always the first step."
