中考英语完形填空：图书馆的秘密角落

完形填空原文

Sun Jia didn't have many friends at school. She was shy and preferred spending time alone. Every day after lunch, while other students played outside, she would quietly walk to the school 1 and sit in the corner near the window.

That corner became her safe place. She would read novels, draw in her notebook, or simply watch the sunlight move across the 2. Nobody ever came to that corner — it was too far from the entrance, and most students thought it was dark and boring. But Sun Jia loved the 3. It was the only place where she didn't feel pressured to talk or pretend to be someone she wasn't.

One afternoon, she found a small folded note between two books on the shelf. It read: "If you're reading this, you've found the best spot in the whole school. — A fellow reader." Sun Jia was 4. Someone else had been here before her and felt the same way. She took out her pen and wrote a 5 on the back: "I agree. This corner is magic."

The next day, she found another note in the same spot: "What book are you reading? I just finished "Wonder" and it changed the way I think about 6." Sun Jia smiled and replied. And so began a secret conversation between two 7 who had never met face to face.

For weeks, they exchanged notes about books, school, and life. Sun Jia felt less 8 than before. She finally had someone who understood her, even though she didn't know who it was. Then one day, a note said: "Want to meet? Same corner, 12:30 tomorrow."

Sun Jia was nervous but 9. The next day, she walked to the corner and found a girl sitting there with a copy of "Wonder" in her hands. It was Xu Lin from the class next door — another quiet girl nobody noticed. They looked at each other and 10. Sometimes, the best friendships begin with a single note.
