中考英语完形填空：第一次演讲

完形填空原文

"Next week, each of you will give a five-minute speech in front of the whole class," Mr. Chen announced. The moment he said that, Lin Yi's heart 1. She had always been terrified of speaking in public. Even answering a simple question in class made her face burn.

Lin Yi spent the entire weekend preparing. She chose a topic she cared about — "Why We Should Protect Stray Animals" — and wrote it out word by word. She practiced in front of her mirror, then in front of her cat, and even 2 herself with her phone. But no matter how many times she rehearsed, her hands still 3 when she imagined standing in front of thirty pairs of eyes.

On Monday morning, speech day arrived. When Mr. Chen called her name, Lin Yi stood up slowly. Her legs felt like they were made of 4. She walked to the front, placed her notes on the podium, and looked up. Everyone was staring at her. Her mind went completely 5.

For three long seconds, she couldn't say a word. Someone in the back row whispered. She almost 6 running back to her seat. But then she looked down at her notes and saw the photo she had printed — a picture of a stray kitten she had rescued last winter. She took a deep breath and began.

Her voice was 7 at first, but as she talked about the kitten, something changed. The words started flowing naturally because she was speaking from the 8. She told the class how the kitten was shivering in the rain, how she brought it home, and how it became her best companion.

When she finished, the room was quiet. Then her classmates began to clap — not just politely, but 9. A few students even came up to her after class to say they were moved. Mr. Chen smiled and said, "See? The best speeches come from stories you truly 10 about."

Lin Yi walked back to her seat with shaking legs — but this time, she was shaking with pride, not fear.
