中考英语完形填空：勇敢的举手

完形填空原文

Wang Lei had always been the quietest boy in Class 3. He was smart and worked hard, but he never raised his hand to answer questions. Even if he knew the exactly right answer, a voice in his head would whisper, "What if you make a 1?"

One week before the final exams, Mr. Liu, their math teacher, wrote a very difficult problem on the blackboard. "This is a bonus question," he said to the class. "Anyone who can solve it and explain it to us will get five extra points on the final exam."

The classroom became silent. Everyone stared at the 2, biting their pens or scratching their heads. Wang Lei looked at the numbers. He took out a piece of scratch paper and started calculating quickly. After five minutes, he found the 3. He checked it twice. It was correct.

"Does anyone know the answer?" Mr. Liu asked, looking around the room.

Wang Lei's heart beat fast. He wanted those five extra points, but the thought of standing up in front of everyone made his hands 4. He looked down at his desk, hoping someone else would volunteer. But nobody moved.

"Come on," Wang Lei told himself. "You know how to 5 this." He slowly started to lift his right arm, but 6 his mind and pulled it back down.

Just as Mr. Liu was about to solve the problem himself, Wang Lei took a deep breath, closed his eyes for a second, and finally raised his hand high in the air. The 7_ class turned to look at him. Some students looked surprised.

"Ah, Wang Lei! Please come to the 8," Mr. Liu said with a welcoming smile.

Wang Lei stood up on his shaking legs. He walked to the blackboard, took the chalk, and wrote down his solution step by step. Then, in a soft but clear voice, he explained his 9. When he finished, Mr. Liu clapped his hands. "Excellent! A perfect and creative solution."

The class broke into applause. As Wang Lei walked back to his seat, he felt a huge weight lift off his shoulders. The extra points were great, but what mattered more was the feeling of 10 his own fear. Sometimes, the hardest part is just lifting your hand.
