How Do People Celebrate New Year Around the World?

① New Year is the most widely celebrated holiday in the world. Almost every country has its own way of welcoming the new year. While the date may differ in some cultures, the feeling is the same everywhere: hope, joy, and a fresh start.

② In China, the Spring Festival is the most important celebration. Families get together for a big dinner on New Year's Eve. They eat dumplings in the north and rice cakes in the south. Children receive red envelopes with lucky money. People set off fireworks and put up red decorations. The colour red is believed to bring good luck and drive away bad spirits.

④ In Spain, people have a fun tradition. At midnight, they eat twelve grapes — one for each stroke of the clock. Each grape stands for one month of the year. If the grape is sweet, that month will be good. If it is sour, the month may bring challenges. People try to eat all twelve grapes before the clock stops ringing.

⑤ In Japan, people visit temples and shrines on New Year's Day. They ring a large bell 108 times. Each ring is said to remove one human desire or worry. Families also send New Year's cards to friends and relatives. It is a quiet and peaceful way to begin the year.

注释： resolution 决心/承诺；stroke （钟的）敲击声；shrine 神社；desire 欲望
