完形填空原文

On a cold Saturday, our biology teacher led us to the riverside park for a bird-watching activity. She told us to stay 1 and use binoculars instead of running after birds.

At first, I only saw branches and gray sky. I felt 2 and thought the trip was a waste of time. Then a small bird landed 3 a fence and tilted its head, as if it were studying us 4.

I slowly raised my notebook and drew a simple 5 of its round body and short tail. The teacher whispered that many birds 6 to warmer places in winter, but some stay and look for seeds.

When the sun came out, more birds appeared. Their calls sounded 7 music across the quiet field. I realized patience is a kind of 8 when you observe nature.

Back in class, I shared my sketches 9 my group. We listed the birds we saw and wrote down one new English word for each. That day, winter felt less 10 because life was still moving in the air.
