05-14 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Last October, our class went on a hiking trip to Green Mountain. Our teacher, Mr. Wang, divided us into groups of five. My group included my best friend Jack, two girls named Mei and Tina, and a quiet boy called Leo who rarely talked to anyone.

② The trail was supposed to take three hours. At first, everything was fun — we sang songs and took photos of the autumn leaves. But after about an hour, we realized we had taken a wrong turn. The path we were on became narrower (更窄) and was covered with fallen branches. "I think we're lost," Mei said, her voice shaking.

③ Everyone started to panic (恐慌) except Leo. He calmly took out a small compass (指南针) from his backpack. "My grandfather taught me how to use this," he said quietly. "The meeting point is to the south. If we follow this direction, we should find the main trail again." We all looked at each other in surprise — none of us had even thought to bring a compass.

⑤ After about forty minutes, we finally heard voices ahead — it was the other groups waiting at the meeting point! Mr. Wang was worried and was about to call for help. When we told him how Leo had guided us back, Mr. Wang smiled and said, "This is the best lesson of the day. Teamwork and staying calm can get you through any difficulty." From that day on, Leo was no longer the quiet kid nobody noticed. He became one of the most respected students in our class.

注释： trail 小径；compass 指南针；steep 陡峭的；slippery 滑的；ankle 脚踝；hesitation 犹豫
