05–16 第1篇

阅读理解（说明文）

① Sleep is very important for everyone, but it is especially important for teenagers. Why? Because teenagers are growing quickly, and their bodies and brains need more rest than adults. Many studies show that teenagers should get about 8 to 10 hours of sleep each night. However, a lot of young people only sleep 6 or 7 hours because of homework, phone games, or other activities.

③ Lack of sleep can also affect teenagers' health. It may make them feel more stressed or worried. Some teenagers who sleep too little become easier to get angry or sad. Their bodies may also get sick more often because sleep helps the immune system (免疫系统) stay strong. When we sleep, our body repairs itself and prepares for the next day.

⑤ Good sleep is not a waste of time — it is a key part of a healthy life. Parents and schools should help teenagers understand this and create better habits. When young people sleep well, they feel happier, learn better, and stay healthier. That is why we should all take sleep seriously.
