05-20 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Xiao Ming was eight years old when he first went to the swimming pool with his father. He had watched other children swim and play in the water many times, but he always stayed far from the edge. The idea of putting his face under water made him feel scared. His father noticed this and signed him up for swimming lessons at the community center.

② The first lesson was difficult. Xiao Ming stood at the shallow end, holding the wall tightly. His teacher, Miss Chen, was kind and patient. She did not push him to jump in. Instead, she asked him to sit on the steps and let the water touch his feet. "Take your time," she said. "The water is your friend, not your enemy." Slowly, Xiao Ming put his feet in. The water felt cool and soft. Nothing bad happened.

③ Week after week, Xiao Ming made small steps. He learned to blow bubbles in the water. Then he practiced putting his face in the water for just one second. Each time he tried, he felt a little less afraid. Miss Chen always smiled and said, "You are doing great!" One day, she held his hands and walked him into deeper water. Xiao Ming's heart beat fast, but he did not give up. He kicked his legs and moved his arms. For the first time, he was swimming.

⑤ Today, Xiao Ming loves swimming. He goes to the pool every weekend. He often thinks about that first lesson and Miss Chen's words. He learned that fear is something we can overcome if we take small steps and never give up. Sometimes the thing we are afraid of is not as scary as we think.
