05-25 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① With the development of the Internet, more and more students choose to study online. Some people say online learning is better than classroom learning, while others hold the opposite view. So, which is actually better?

② Supporters of online learning believe it has many advantages. First, students can study at any time and any place. They do not need to travel to school, which saves both time and money. Second, online courses often provide a lot of videos and materials that students can watch or read again and again. If they miss something in class, they can easily review it. Third, shy students may feel more comfortable asking questions online because they do not have to speak in front of the whole class.

③ However, supporters of classroom learning argue that face-to-face teaching is more effective. In a real classroom, teachers can see students' faces and know immediately if they understand or not. Students can also discuss with classmates and work on group projects together, which helps them develop teamwork skills. Besides, schools offer a clear schedule (日程) and a quiet place to study. At home, students may be distracted (分心) by games, phones or family members, which makes it harder to stay focused.

④ In my opinion, both ways have their own strengths. Online learning is suitable when we need flexibility (灵活性) or when we want to review materials. Classroom learning works better when we need direct interaction (互动) with teachers and peers, or when we have difficulty staying focused at home. The best way might be to combine both — use online tools to support what we learn in the classroom. In this way, we can get the benefits of both worlds.

⑤ What do you think? Perhaps the answer is different for different people. The most important thing is to choose the way that works best for you.

注释： schedule 日程；distract 使分心；flexibility 灵活性；interaction 互动
