05-30 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Zhang Wei was a 15-year-old boy who had never cooked before. His parents always prepared meals for the family. One weekend, when his mother was ill in bed and his father was busy at work, Zhang Wei decided to make dinner for his parents. "I want to do something for them," he thought.

② He opened the fridge and found eggs, tomatoes, and some rice. He remembered his mother often made tomato and egg stir-fry (炒番茄鸡蛋), so he decided to try it. First, he washed the tomatoes and cut them into small pieces. Then he beat the eggs in a bowl. When he turned on the stove (炉灶), his hands were shaking a little because he was nervous.

③ Zhang Wei added oil to the pan and waited for it to get hot. He poured in the eggs first and stirred (搅拌) them quickly. Then he put in the tomatoes. He forgot to add salt at first, so he added it later. The dish did not look as pretty as his mother's, but it smelled good. He also cooked some rice in the rice cooker.

④ When his father came home, he was surprised to see the food on the table. "Did you make this, Wei?" his father asked. Zhang Wei nodded and served his mother a bowl of rice in her room. His mother's eyes were a little red when she tasted the food. "It's delicious," she said softly. "I'm so proud of you."

⑤ That evening, Zhang Wei learned something important. Cooking for his parents was not just about the food — it was a way to show his love. "I will help more at home from now on," he promised himself. His parents smiled and agreed. It was a simple meal, but it filled the whole house with warmth.
