06-04 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Many teenagers like to follow stars — singers, actors, or athletes. They buy their posters, watch their shows, and try to learn everything about them. Some parents and teachers worry: Is it harmful for young people to idolize (崇拜) celebrities? Different people have different views.

③ Those who think it can be helpful believe that stars can encourage teenagers to work hard. For example, an athlete's story of success may inspire (激励) a young person to practice harder in sports or study. Stars can also bring joy — listening to music or watching movies can help students relax after a busy day. As long as teenagers do not go too far, following stars can be a normal part of growing up.

④ What experts suggest: It is okay to admire someone, but teenagers should keep a balance. Do not let your hobbies affect your study or health. Choose stars who have positive values — those who work hard, help others, or overcome difficulties. Parents and teachers can guide young people to think critically about what they see and hear.

⑤ In conclusion, following stars is not always bad. The key is to do it in a sensible (理智的) way — enjoy the good things, avoid the bad ones, and never forget your own goals and values.

注释： idolize 崇拜；inspire 激励；sensible 理智的
