06-05 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① It was the school sports day. Zhang Ming stood at the starting line for the 800-meter race. He had practiced for weeks and was ready to give his best. When the gun went off, he ran forward with the other runners. In the first lap, he kept a steady pace and stayed in the middle of the group.

② Halfway through the second lap, something went wrong. Zhang Ming's foot hit a small stone on the track. He lost his balance and fell heavily onto the ground. His knee hurt badly and his hands were scratched. For a moment, he lay there, feeling shocked and embarrassed. Some runners passed him. A teacher rushed over and asked if he wanted to stop. "Can you continue?" she asked worriedly.

③ Zhang Ming looked at the track ahead. Many runners had already crossed the finish line. His knee was bleeding, but he stood up slowly. "I will finish the race," he said to the teacher. He began to run again, but each step was painful. Some students in the stands started to clap and cheer for him. "Keep going, Zhang Ming! You can do it!" their voices encouraged him.

④ Step by step, Zhang Ming kept moving forward. He was the last one on the track, but he did not give up. When he finally crossed the finish line, the whole crowd stood up and cheered. His classmates ran to him and helped him sit down. The PE teacher patted his shoulder and said, "Zhang Ming, you are a true athlete. Finishing the race matters more than winning."

⑤ Zhang Ming will never forget that day. He learned that sometimes life knocks you down, but what matters is whether you choose to stand up again. The applause (掌声) he received was not for being the fastest, but for having the courage to finish what he had started.

注释： lap 圈；scratch 划伤；applause 掌声
