06-06 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Many parents wonder whether they should check their children's phones. Teenagers often spend hours on their phones — chatting, watching videos, or playing games. Some parents believe it is their duty to know what their kids are doing online. Others think checking phones invades (侵犯) privacy and may harm trust. Let us look at both sides.

④ What we can learn: There is no simple answer. Some families choose to agree on rules together — for example, parents can look at phones at certain times, but they tell their children first. Open communication is key. Parents should talk with their children about online safety and why they care. Teenagers need to understand that parents check phones out of love, not to control them. Setting clear rules and respecting each other can help both sides.

注释： invade 侵犯；supervision 监督；constant 持续的
