06-07 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Last summer, 14-year-old Zhang Wei spent two weeks at his uncle's fruit farm in the countryside. His uncle grew apples, peaches (桃子) and pears. It was harvest (收获) time, and many workers were needed. Zhang Wei decided to help. He woke up at five every morning and went to the orchard (果园) with the other workers.

② The first few days were not easy. The sun was strong and Zhang Wei's arms hurt from picking fruit. He had to climb ladders to reach the highest branches. Sometimes he dropped an apple and it rolled away. "Be careful and take your time," his uncle said. "Every apple counts." Zhang Wei nodded and kept trying. Slowly, he learned to pick fruit without damaging it.

④ One afternoon, a tourist came to the farm. She asked Zhang Wei, "Why are you working here? You are so young." Zhang Wei smiled and said, "I want to help my uncle and learn about farming. Now I know that the fruit we buy in the city does not appear by itself. Someone has to pick it under the hot sun." The tourist nodded and bought a basket of apples.

⑤ When Zhang Wei returned home, he told his mother, "I will never waste food again. I know how much work goes into every apple and every pear." That summer on the farm was short, but the lesson stayed with him for a long time.
