06-11 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Last month, our school held a charity bazaar (义卖会) to help students from poor families. Li Ming, a quiet boy from Class 3, decided to sell handmade bookmarks and paper flowers that he had made with his mother at home. He spent two weeks preparing. Every night after homework, he folded paper, drew pictures, and tied ribbons (丝带) on each bookmark. His mother said, "These are beautiful. I'm sure students will love them."

② On the day of the bazaar, Li Ming set up a small table near the school gate. He laid out his bookmarks and paper flowers neatly. At first, few people stopped. Li Ming felt a bit nervous. Then a teacher walked over and picked up a bookmark. "Did you make this yourself?" she asked. Li Ming nodded. "It's lovely. I'll take five." The teacher paid and encouraged other students to come and look. Soon, more and more people gathered around Li Ming's table.

③ By noon, Li Ming had sold almost everything. He counted the money: 380 yuan. His eyes brightened. He knew that 380 yuan could buy books and supplies for a poor classmate. "I never thought my hobby could help others," Li Ming said to himself. A senior student who had bought a paper flower said, "Your work is creative. You should be proud."

④ In the afternoon, the school announced the total money raised: 12,000 yuan. The headteacher said, "Thanks to students like Li Ming who worked hard and shared their skills, we can support more students in need." Li Ming stood in the crowd, feeling both shy and happy. He had used his own hands to make a difference.

⑤ That night, Li Ming told his mother about the bazaar. "Mom, I want to make more crafts (手工艺品) next time. Maybe I can teach other students how to make them too." His mother smiled and said, "You've learned something important today: helping others can start with small things we do with our hearts."
