06–13 第1篇

阅读理解（说明文）

① Dolphins are one of the smartest animals in the sea. They have large brains and can solve problems. Scientists have studied dolphins for many years and found that they can understand signs and follow simple instructions. Some dolphins have even learned to use tools. For example, they may use a piece of seaweed to protect their noses when looking for food on the ocean floor.

② Dolphins are also very social. They live in groups called pods. A pod may have from a few dolphins to hundreds. In the pod, dolphins work together. They hunt for fish together and share food. When a dolphin is sick or hurt, others in the pod will stay nearby and help it. They take turns to push the sick dolphin up to the surface so it can breathe. This shows that dolphins care about each other.

③ Dolphins communicate in many ways. They make clicks and whistles. Each dolphin has its own "signature whistle" — a sound that is unique, like a name. When two dolphins meet, they may use these whistles to say hello. Scientists believe that dolphins can also pass information to each other about food, danger, or their feelings.

⑤ Dolphins are friendly to humans too. They often swim near boats and sometimes help fishermen by driving fish toward their nets. However, dolphins need a clean and safe ocean. Pollution and fishing nets can hurt them. We should protect dolphins and their home so that future generations can still enjoy these wonderful creatures.
