① Should students take part in community service? This is a question that many schools and families are discussing today. Some say it is a waste of time. Others believe it is very important for students' growth. Let us look at both sides of the argument.

② Reasons for community service: First, it helps students understand the world outside school. When students help clean up parks, visit the elderly, or teach younger children to read, they learn what real life is like. Second, community service develops important skills such as teamwork, responsibility, and communication. These skills will be useful when they grow up and look for jobs. Third, many students feel happy and proud when they help others. It gives them a sense of purpose. Some schools have even made community service part of their curriculum (课程) because they see how much it helps students grow.

③ Reasons against community service: Some people worry that community service takes too much time away from study. Students already have much homework and many exams. Adding community service may make them more tired and stressed. Another concern is that some students may not really want to help — they only do it because they have to. Forced service may not teach the right values. Also, parents sometimes worry about safety when their children go out to serve the community.

⑤ In conclusion, community service can be a valuable experience for students when it is done in the right way. It should not replace study, but it can add something important to it: a chance to learn about society, develop character, and become better people. The question is not whether to do it, but how to do it well.
