06-20 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Should middle school students learn to do housework? This question is being discussed by many parents and teachers. Some believe that students should only focus on their studies. Others think that doing housework is necessary for their growth. Let us look at both sides.

注释： disturbance 打扰；harmonious 和谐的
