① Should Students Be Encouraged to Write Diaries?

② Writing a diary (日记) is a habit that many people had when they were young. But today, fewer students keep a diary. Some teachers and parents wonder whether we should encourage students to write diaries. Let us think about the advantages and disadvantages.

③ Reasons for encouraging diary writing: First, writing a diary helps students practice their English or Chinese. The more they write, the better their writing skills become. Second, a diary is a private place where students can express their feelings and thoughts. They can write about happy things, sad things, or things that worry them. This can help them feel better and understand themselves. Third, a diary is a good way to record daily life. When students look back at their diaries years later, they can remember what happened and how they grew up.

⑤ My view: I think we should encourage students to write diaries, but we should not force them. Schools can offer diary-writing clubs or activities for those who are interested. Parents and teachers should never read a student's diary without permission. A diary should be a safe and free space for students. When writing becomes a choice rather than a task, more students may discover the joy of keeping a diary.
