07-14 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Does Too Much Homework Hurt Students' Creativity?

② Many parents and teachers believe that homework helps students learn. However, some people worry that too much homework may affect (影响) students' creativity. What is the truth?

⑤ The conclusion: Balance is the key. Students need both practice and free time. Too much homework may hurt creativity and cause stress. Too little may lead to weak basic skills. Schools and parents should work together to find the right amount. Let homework be useful, not a burden (负担).

注释： affect 影响；curious 好奇的；responsible 有责任心的；repetitive 重复的；encourage 鼓励；burden 负担
