阅读理解（记叙文）

Learning to Accept Failure

① Li Wei had practiced badminton for three years. He trained hard every day and dreamed of winning the school championship. When the competition day came, he felt confident. "I've prepared so well. I can do this," he told himself.

② The match began. Li Wei won the first game easily. His opponent (对手), a boy from another class, seemed nervous. But in the second game, everything changed. The other boy became more focused and played better. Li Wei made several mistakes. He lost the second game. In the final game, Li Wei tried his best, but he was too anxious. He lost the match 2–1.

④ Li Wei thought about the coach's words. He realized that he had been too proud after winning the first game. He had stopped paying attention and made careless mistakes. Failure taught him that he needed to stay focused until the very end. He also understood that one loss did not define (定义) who he was. He could still improve and try again next year.

⑤ The next day, Li Wei went back to training. He worked even harder and became more humble (谦虚的). A few months later, he won a smaller competition. This time, he stayed calm throughout the whole match. Li Wei learned that accepting failure is not giving up — it is the first step toward becoming stronger.

注释： opponent 对手；championship 锦标赛；court 球场；define 定义；humble 谦虚的
