① Should Students Choose Their Own Seats?

② In many classrooms, teachers decide where students sit. But some people think that students should be allowed to choose their own seats. This topic has caused a lot of discussion. Let us look at both sides.

⑤ In conclusion, there is no perfect answer. Some teachers use a mixed way: students can suggest where they want to sit, but the teacher makes the final decision. This balance might work better. The most important thing is that every student can learn well and feel comfortable in the classroom.
