A Warm Afternoon at the Nursing Home

① Last summer, Zhang Ming, a 14-year-old student, joined a volunteer program at a nursing home. At first, he felt nervous. "What could I do to help the elderly?" he wondered. He had no experience and did not know what to expect.

② On his first day, Zhang Ming was asked to read newspapers to Grandpa Wang, who had poor eyesight. As he read, Grandpa Wang listened quietly. When Zhang Ming finished an article about the weather, Grandpa Wang smiled and said, "Your voice reminds me of my grandson. He lives in another city and rarely visits." Zhang Ming saw tears in the old man's eyes. At that moment, he understood that the elderly needed more than care — they needed company and someone to talk to.

③ The next week, Zhang Ming brought his guitar. He played simple songs for the elderly. Grandma Li, who seldom spoke, began to hum along. Soon, other residents gathered around. When Zhang Ming played an old folk song, Grandma Li's eyes lit up. "I used to sing this when I was young," she said softly. Her wrinkled face broke into a warm smile.

⑤ The volunteer program ended in August, but Zhang Ming did not stop. He still visits the nursing home twice a month. "Those afternoons changed me," he said. "I learned that a little time and care can mean so much. The elderly have so many stories to share. We just need to listen." His experience taught him the true meaning of respect and love for the old.
