① Do Reality TV Shows Have Positive Effects on Teenagers?

⑤ The conclusion: Reality TV is not all bad or all good. The key is what teenagers watch and how much. Parents and teachers can help by choosing programs with positive messages and by limiting (限制) screen time. Teenagers themselves should learn to think critically about what they see—not everything on TV reflects real life. Balance is important: some entertainment is fine, but real learning, exercise, and rest should always come first.

注释： cooperate 合作；conflict 冲突；limit 限制
