① Should We Limit Teenagers' Daily Social Media Use?

② Social media has become a big part of teenage life. Many young people spend hours each day on apps like TikTok, WeChat and Weibo. Some parents and experts worry that too much screen time may harm teenagers' health and studies. The question is: should we limit how long teenagers can use social media each day? This topic has caused heated debate.

③ Those who support limiting screen time say that too much social media can lead to several problems. First, it may affect teenagers' eyes and sleep. Staring at screens for long hours can hurt the eyes, and many teens stay up late scrolling through their phones. Second, heavy users may find it hard to focus on homework or reading. Their grades might drop. Third, some studies show that too much social media can make young people feel lonely or anxious (焦虑的) when they compare themselves with others online. Supporters believe that setting a daily limit—for example, two hours—can help teenagers balance their time and protect their health.

④ Those who oppose limits argue that social media is not all bad. Teenagers use it to chat with friends, share ideas, and learn about the world. It helps them stay connected and can be useful for group projects and homework. They also say that parents cannot control everything—teenagers will find ways to use their phones anyway. Besides, some teens use social media to learn new skills, such as drawing or music. Opponents think that rather than limiting time, parents should teach their children how to use social media wisely instead.

⑤ In my opinion, both sides have valid points. Social media is a tool—it can be helpful or harmful depending on how we use it. I think teenagers do need some guidance. Parents and schools can work together to help young people develop good habits. This might include having "screen-free" times at home, such as during dinner or before bed. The goal should not be to ban social media completely, but to help teenagers use it in a healthy and balanced way.
