08-15 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Should students take part in school management and decision-making? This question has become popular in many schools. Some schools have started to let students vote on certain rules or join student councils (学生会). But is this a good idea? Let's think about it.

② Those who support student participation believe it has many advantages. First, students are the main users of the school. They know best what they need — for example, better lunch choices, more club activities, or changes to the library opening hours. Their ideas can help make the school a better place. Second, when students take part in decisions, they learn to be responsible (负责任的) and think carefully. This prepares them for future life. Third, it can make students feel valued. When their voices are heard, they may care more about the school and follow rules more willingly (心甘情愿地).

注释： council 委员会；responsible 负责任的；willingly 心甘情愿地；complex 复杂的；confusion 混乱；democracy 民主
