08-16 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Last July, our school organized a volunteer activity at Sunshine Nursing Home (养老院). I signed up with my best friend Wang Lei. To be honest, I was a little nervous because I had never spent time with elderly people outside my family.

④ After lunch, we helped clean the rooms and watered the flowers in the garden. Some students performed songs and dances for the old people. The whole nursing home was filled with laughter. When it was time to leave, Mrs. Li held my hand tightly and said, "Thank you for coming. It gets lonely here sometimes. Your visit made my whole week brighter."

⑤ On the bus home, I kept thinking about Mrs. Li's words. I realized that volunteering was not just about helping others — it also taught me to be grateful and caring. Since that day, Wang Lei and I have gone back to the nursing home every month. Each visit reminds us that a little company can mean the world to someone who is alone.

注释： nursing home 养老院；crane 鹤；treasure 珍惜；candlelight 烛光；grateful 感恩的
